Scott McCullough, Director of Planning/Development Services, reminded commissioners that they should disclose any ex parte communications on this quasi-judicial matter.

Cromwell said he had received no ex parte communications on this item, certainly nothing substantial.

Carter said he did not either.

Amyx said he did not either.

Dever said he did not either.

Sandra Day, Planner, presented the staff report.

Amyx said there was continuous sidewalk throughout.

Day said it was only on one side.

Carter asked if it was 4 foot sidewalk.

Corliss said it was 5 foot.

Bill Newsome, representing the development, said they were trying to jumpstart some residential activity of the east side of town. The rezoning is tied to taking the site plan from a grid pattern to something more interesting to both builders and home owners. The second issue relates to the plat and variance. It was critical to have starter priced housing near East Hills and Farmland and the economic development activity there. It was about $1000 per lot savings to have sidewalks on one side of the street and that was significant at this price point. They wanted to make this cost effective as possible.

Carter asked if the cost was $1000 to the builder, what was the cost to the buyer?
Newsome said the cost, in his opinion would be passed through to the home buyer.

Carter asked if it would all be passed on.

Newsome said there was some margin.

Carter asked what the price point was.

Newsome said possibly in the 160s for the homes and 130s for the townhouses.

Carter said he was fine with the plat. His concerns with the variance had to do with the retiree task force and the complete streets concept. He was supportive of that. The variance was tough for him but he was going to vote for it. It was approved prior to the code changes. The $1000 cost was an issue but he didn’t know if that would put someone out of a house or not. He didn’t think it was a big safety issue. The need for affordable housing and the fact that it was approved before the code changes were important. Going forward though, he wanted us to be supportive of complete streets.

Amyx said the width of the sidewalk was significant, and the fact that it was approved before the code change. Staff’s recommendation helped him look at this in a positive way. In light of affordable housing it was something we needed to look at.

Dever said he was eager to move forward with building some affordable housing. The presence of sidewalks on both sides was important, but many neighborhoods did not have them, but they worked well as long as the sidewalks were placed correctly. The cost might be more than $1000 in the future. This minor alteration is not substantial enough not to approve it.

Cromwell said he was totally in favor of complete streets. Here we had an example of a project that was already platted under our original rules. Changes were made so it was now considered under the new rules, but an exception here was a good idea. A thousand dollars on a $30,000 lot was significant. Other fees and commissions would rack up on that. This particular development is not quite grandfathered in but it merited an exception given the lack of opposition.

Mayor Cromwell called for public comment.
None was received.
